

About the author

Julian Bell has worked as an English teacher for over thirty years, and since 2000 has been Head of English and Debating at Godolphin and Latymer School in London. When he arrived, Godolphin and Latymer had no debating provision whatsoever, but is now described as 'a flagship debating school'. As well as running Godolphin and Latymer's internal debating programme, which involves over 100 students, he is also founder and leader of three major debating competitions: the London Junior Debating League for Years 7-8, the London Middle School Debating Competition for Years 9-11, and the London Sixth Form Debating Competition for Years 12-13. He works as an oracy trainer and debate judge for both the English Speaking Union and The Noisy Classroom, and regularly visits schools across the country to offer consultancy and CPD for teachers and training for students in debating and public speaking.
