

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My love for competitive debate began as the result of an outstanding high school debate coach—Frank Kruse at Newton Senior High School in Newton, Iowa. Frank Kruse was one of those teachers who dramatically changed the lives of his students for the better—I can with certainty say that happened in my case. Robert Kemp was my teacher, colleague, and friend during the eight years I spent as a debater and graduate student at the University of Iowa. I dedicate this book to Frank Kruse and Bob Kemp, the debate coaches who introduced me to the life of the mind.

I am grateful to the participants in the national final debates in 2006 and 2007 for agreeing to the publication of their speeches in this volume. The 2006 public forum debate finalists were Valerie Hobbs/Michelle Schmit from Bishop Heelan High School in Sioux City, Iowa (coached by Elizabeth Dalton), and David Nadle/Jennifer Goldstein from Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida (coached by Diane McCormick). The 2007 Lincoln-Douglas debate finalists were Taarini Vohra of The Hockaday School in Dallas, Texas (coached by Stacy Thomas), and Bilal Malik of James Logan High School in Union City, California (coached by Tommie Lindsay, Jr.). The 2007 policy debate finalists were Andrew Baker/Sarah Weiner of Shawnee Mission West High School in Shawnee Mission, Kansas (coached by Ken King), and Stephanie Spies/Matt Fisher of Glenbrook North High School in Northbrook, Illinois (coached by Christina Tallungan).

I am indebted to Tim Averill, the debate coach at the Waring School in Beverly, Massachusetts, who was willing to share his extensive teaching resources for the coaching of public forum debate. Scott Wunn, Executive Director of the National Forensic League, and Kent Summers, Associate Director of the National Federation of State High School Associations, also provided essential resource materials.

Finally, I appreciate the assistance and encouragement of my wife Connie, the love of my life.